What might this include?

Being in the trade means lots of protective clothing and high wear. There's not a lot of dry cleaning but we've still got to cover cost of our work clothes plus the protective gear on top. Getting an allowance doesn't stop you claiming the cost!

- The cost of the work clothes and the embroidery if the boss gets around to it
- Boot covers, hat and sunnies when you're on site.
- An allowance for washing all that at home.

He uses his car a lot, he's young after all. Its one thing to get to work but what about going between jobs and college? Using the built in log book and knowing a little bit about the vehicle, Xpnsit tracks and claims the lot..

- Running work errands in his car, even getting lunch for the boss, it all add's up.
- Km's travelled to and from college, a big capacity V8 means higher expense allowance too.
- Driving between work sites and with gear in the back.

Some say that a man is judged by the size or number of his tools and he likes to have good gear. Some of it is his choice to use and others are just a part of what he needs.

- Magazines and journals to see what's happening in the trade
- The latest lithium-ion cordless
- Sun cream and skin moisturiser, who said it was only for women?
- Countless small tools, odd's and ends through out the year.
- The big secure tool chest to store it all in, depreciate that.
- Racks for the ute, in case you need to pick up timber, again.

And what about working late on a site and coming home?

- Its late, let's have dinner while we're here, claim it.
- Sometimes you're just too tired to drive back from that job, stay the night and claim the cost, even if you get an allowance.
